Kyoto Tower's observation deck offers a 360° panoramic view of the entire city, from 131 meters up. Enjoy looking out over Kyoto and the surrounding mountains.

Toji Temple

This is the only remaining structure from the Heian-kyo era roughly a thousand years ago, and part of a UNESCO World Heritage Site. The gates open every single morning at 5:00, and visiting this early is a great way to make the most of a day seeing the sights in Kyoto. The temple's pagoda is the tallest in Japan, at 55 meters tall. The bottom floor is opened a few times a year for the public to see inside.

c Sanjusangen-do Temple

Sanjusangen-do Temple

This temple in Higashiyama runs for 120 meters from north to south. It's so long that you practically can't see from one end to the other — in fact, the photo here only shows half of the exterior. This must-visit destination will take your breath away the moment you set foot inside. The temple's principal image is in the center: a seated statue of the thousand-armed Kannon. On either side are 500 standing eleven-faced thousand-armed Kannon statues, as well as the wind and thunder gods Fujin and Raijin in the front row, and the Twenty-Eight Legions. These countless statues lined up for 120 meters are a truly remarkable sight.

Kodaiji Temple

This temple was built by the nun Kodai-in, once the wife of warlord Toyotomi Hideyoshi, as a prayer for his soul.

Legend has it that she would gaze at the moon, thinking about her late husband. The temple is home to many Important Cultural Properties, such as the Kangetsudai "moon-viewing platform," and the Otamaya, a grave for this couple decorated with lacquer and maki-e gold powder.

1 Tenryuji Temple

Arashiyama

This corner of Kyoto is famous for its natural scenery: it is considered one of Japan's 100 finest places to see cherry blossoms, and to see autumn colors. The Togetsukyo Bridge has long been a symbol of Arashiyama, loved centuries ago by aristocrats. This bridge marks the boundary between the Oigawa River upstream and the Katsura River downstream. Arashiyama has plenty to see and do, from the hot-spring-fed footbath on the platform of Arashiyama Station on the Randen Line, to the famous bamboo grove, and even the UNESCO World Heritage Site Tenryuji Temple.

k Togetsukyo Bridge

Togetsukyo Bridge

This bridge crosses the Katsura River, which runs between Sagano and Arashiyama. It is said to have first been built by the monk Dosho, nearly 1,200 years ago, and was originally called Horinji Bridge, named for the temple to its south. There are also legends of a "Kotokiki Bridge" from the 12th century. Its current name, literally "crossing-moon bridge," was given to it by Emperor Kameyama roughly 750 years ago, inspired by the sight of the moon over the bridge.

Fushimi-Inari Taisha Shrine

Fushimi-Inari Taisha Shrine (Red Gate Shrine)

Fushimi-Inari Taisha Shrine is the head shrine for all Inari shrines nationwide, and one of the oldest shrines in Kyoto. It draws more visitors than nearly any other shrine in Japan, and is especially lively on New Year's Day, the first day of each month, and on Hatsu-uma (the first Day of the Horse of the new lunar year). The shrine is famously dedicated to the god of business prosperity: the name "Inari" comes from "Inenari," which sounds like "ripening rice." Inari was originally the god of bountiful harvests, which broadened in meaning over time from only farmers to also people involved in business in general.

The shrine's famous Senbon-Torii, or "thousand torii gates," were given as donations in thanks for prayers answered.
